TL;DR & Editorial Take

The US markets saw a mixed performance in the last session, with the S&P 500 declining by -0.22% and the Nasdaq 100 falling by -1.54%. The Dow Jones remained relatively stable, with a decline of -0.03%. The key takeaways from the session are:

- The VIX saw an increase of +0.85%, indicating a rise in volatility.
- The 10Y Yield surged by +2.36%, reaching 4.47.
- The BTC and ETH saw significant gains, with increases of +3.72% and +3.94%, respectively.

The mixed performance of the US markets can be attributed to the decline in tech stocks, with NVDA falling by -1.25% and XLK declining by -2.57%. However, the financial sector saw a gain, with XLF increasing by +2.18%.

The editorial take is that the US markets are experiencing a period of consolidation, with investors awaiting the next catalyst for growth. The rise in volatility and the surge in the 10Y Yield indicate a shift in market sentiment, and investors should be prepared for potential changes in the market landscape.
